

posted on 03/21/2011 at 8:30 am

March 18, 2011

To Fluke Authorized North American Distributors:

We are writing to inform you of some potential supply chain shortages resulting from the unfortunate situation in Japan. While at this point we have no supply chain issues, we are closely monitoring demand and our current material supply for our products. At some point, depending on demand it is possible that we could have a raw material supply issue to produce our products at their currently standard lead times as there are a number of components that are sourced from Japan. You may want to consider adding additional inventory of your larger selling Fluke and Amprobe products as a contingency for these potential supply chain issues.

Thank you for your continued strong support of Fluke products and we will keep you informed as we get more clarity on this supply chain situation.

Sincerely,

Rick Laporte
VP North American Sales